- The decision as to whether or not to invite candidates for interview is based entirely on the information contained in the application form. It is therefore essential that you give as much information you can about yourself and relate it to the post requirements. Please assume we know nothing about you.
- To give yourself the best chance of being shortlisted for the post, you should give clear examples of how you can demonstrate that you meet each of the criteria on the person specification. The person specification explains the skills, knowledge and experience that are either essential (E) or desirable (D) for this post. Against each criteria it is shown how you will be assessed either by:-

A - application form (facts that you include in your application)

T - there will be a test at interview to assess if you meet this criteria

I – you will be assessed by questions at interview to see if you meet this criteria

M – medical advice can be sought regarding ability to meet the criteria

The Gedling Employee standard is a requirement for all employees. You will be asked questions about how you meet this at interview. You are not required to demonstrate how you meet this on your application form.

- You should include all relevant experience that you have, this does not necessarily mean through paid work, for example community or voluntary work, and experience gained in the home or through leisure pursuits can also be included.
- You should give examples of where you have used your skills or gained experience to demonstrate that you possess the required skills, knowledge and experience to meet the requirements of the Person Specification.
